

STATIONERY

A STEADY STREAM
of stationery and office supplies flows from the store to our customers, and another stream replenishes the stock. This is kept up to a condition where betterment is impossible.

STATIONERY
from the best manufacturers in each line fills our shelves, and little money will transfer the ownership. The proof of the value is in the quality.

THE BARRE DAILY TIMES

MONDAY, JUNE 12, 1905.

A GRANDMOTHER CALLED

to see if she could insure for the benefit of her grandson twenty-four years of age, who didn't "get along very well" and was "mostly dependent on her for support." (She keeps boarders.) We advised her to buy an annuity for herself and to stop the young man's rations and see if he couldn't get along better AND FURTHER. Instead of receiving the suggestion kindly, as was intended, she said she would go to some Benefit Association, as her grandson told her "the regular companies were no good, anyway." Still we continue, 56th year, doing business in 42 states. The National Life Insurance Company of Vermont (Mutual). Organized in 1850, S. S. Ballard, General Agent. N. J. Ballard, Local Agent, Rooms 2 and 3, Miles' Block, Barre, Vt.

Henrietta Crossman.
The double bill "Nance Oldfield" and "Madeline" in which Henrietta Crossman will appear at the Barre opera house soon, is one of the most popular in her repertoire. Combining as it does comedy and tragedy it gives Miss Crossman an opportunity to display her wonderful versatility. "Nance Oldfield" one of the most delightful of the old English comedies, is considered a classic. In it Miss Crossman has made one of her most pronounced successes. The tragedy of "Madeline" is by Mrs. W. K. Clifford of London, a writer of renown. It is a powerful story of strong heart interest and has probably created more comment than any play yet produced by Miss Crossman.

SEALED BIDS

For the score card privilege, also sealed bids for the refreshment privileges during the base ball season, covering thirty games, at Inter-City Park, will be received up to and including Monday, June 12th, 1905. Address,

It is no secret that for cuts, burns, ulcers, fever sores, sore eyes, boils, etc., nothing is so effective as Bucklen's Arnica Salve. "It didn't take long to cure a bad sore I had, and it is all O. K. for sore eyes," writes D. L. Gregory of Hope, Tex. Only 25c at the Red Cross Pharmacy.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup seems especially adapted to the needs of the children. Pleasant to take; soothing in its influence. It is the remedy of all remedies for every form of throat and lung disease.

Ten thousand demons gnawing away at one's vitals couldn't be much worse than the tortures of itching piles. Yet there's a cure. Doan's Ointment never fails.

RIGHTS OF RUSSIANS.

Oddities of the Views Held by the Peasantry.

In the opinion of the Russian people no one has the right to appropriate to himself anything but the product of his own labor, says W. Tcherkessoff in the Chicago News. In a peasant's household the woman has the right to dispose according to her own wishes of all that she has herself produced. Usually all the products of the fields and the cattle belong to the man, while the products of the garden, the poultry and the various spinning industries belong to the housewife. It is the same in the case of chance profits. If you go to a peasant's house for a meal or a drink or a night's lodging and wish to pay something you must always speak to the woman. The man will never take your money.

I attribute to this popular custom the fact that the Russian code recognizes the division of property between the husband and the wife, and it is that which has created for the Russian woman an economic and consequently a social position far superior in most respects to that enjoyed by woman in western Europe.

Owing to this idea that private property can only exist in those things which are the product of one's own labor the Russian people obstinately refuse to consider fishing, hunting or the use of forests for personal requirements as a crime. "The forests and the water are God's," they naively say, "and each has the right to make use of them according to his needs." Recent reports of peasants cutting down forests on private estates indicate the strength of this sentiment.

"But it is a theft to cut down wood on the estate of Lord N." said Yakushim, one of the best observers of popular life, to some peasants who were openly going in carts to a private estate to get fuel.

"What do you say, little father?" answered the peasants, astonished. "If some one were to take wood that you had already cut or corn that you had already sown that certainly would be a theft, but any one has a right to cut down a tree that God alone has cared for. To take what a man has produced would be to steal. But the forests, the game, the fish are created for all—yes, for all."

Always the people act in accordance with similar ideas of justice. The majority of "crimes" committed by peasants are against private or state property in forests. For the Russian peasant there exists only one moral authority which possesses the right of temporarily forbidding the use of such and such a piece of common property—it is his mir, the full assembly of his commune. Sometimes in order to preserve the forests or fish the mir will proclaim a place "sacred" (zapovednina) for so many years. It knows perfectly well that no Russian will touch the least twig in a "sacred" forest. The zapovednina forests are well known in Russia, and it is also known how the people respect the decisions of the mir. A whole series of popular proverbs exist which prove to what a degree the Russians esteem, revere, their mir. The people say, "No one goes against the mir." "Even the woods bend before the decision of the mir." "It is a glorious thing to die for the mir."

And the mir makes its decisions respected only by its practice of solidarity and equality, while the all powerful government of the czar cannot get the peasants to obey its laws concerning private and state property.

But there is nothing astonishing in the fact that the efforts of the government are fruitless. The people have long been accustomed to look upon the administration and the government as its worst enemies. "Moscow is as full of bad government officials as a forest is of branches," says an old proverb. The people have always tried to fly from the central government and its corrupt and despotic officials.

"Thirty years ago," says General Venukoff, "the governor of the province of Amur, General Pedashenko while on a journey of inspection visited a village recently founded by voluntary colonists. He was struck by the prosperity they had attained in so short a time (two years), while the government colonies were in a pitiable condition."

"You live here very comfortably, my friends," said he to the peasants—much more so than the inhabitants of the banks of the Amur. Why is it so?" "Ha, little father, it is because here we live far from the administration," answered the peasants.

"Oh, what cruel irony!" concludes General Venukoff.

"How true!" we, for our part, add.
